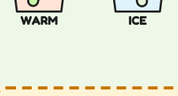
Made in Six STEM Lab: Try It at Home Science: Glow Sticks vs. Fireflies

You need

- 2 glow sticks, same color
- 2 clear cups
- warm tap water (not hot!)
- ice water
- a dark room



Try it!

1. Fill one cup with warm tap water and one cup with ice water.
2. A grown-up bends each glow stick until it snaps inside, then shakes it.
3. Put one stick in each cup. Wait 3 minutes.
4. Turn off the lights. Which one is brighter?
5. Check again in an hour and at bedtime. Which one glows longer?

What happened?

Snap! Two liquids inside the stick mix, and their chemical reaction makes light without heat: cold light (scientists say chemiluminescence). Warm water speeds the reaction up: brighter, but it fades sooner. Ice water slows it down: dimmer, but it lasts longer.

God's Design

Page 1 says: "In fireflies, the light is produced through a chemical reaction between oxygen and other special chemicals." People need a man-made stick to make cold light. God designed tiny fireflies to make it all by themselves!

"O LORD, how manifold are Your works! In wisdom You have made them all."
Psalm 104:24

⚠ Grown-up helper needed. Never cut, bite, or break open a glow stick: the liquid can sting eyes and skin. Warm tap water only, never hot. Throw away a cracked or leaky stick and wash with soap and water.

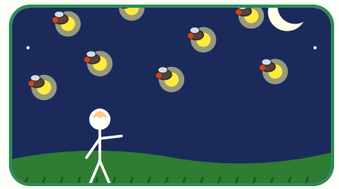
How Do Fireflies Glow?

Question: Dear Digger Doug,
How do fireflies glow?



Answer: Dear Sisi & Katie,

Fireflies are one of the coolest parts of summertime because they are insects that glow! This is because of something called bioluminescence (bye-oh-LOO-mih-NESS-ents). Bioluminescence is the ability of a living thing to make its own light through chemical reactions. In fireflies, the light is produced through a chemical reaction between oxygen and other special chemicals. When the oxygen is used inside the firefly's body to react with the other chemicals, it produces light as a product of the reaction. Fireflies rest during the day and come out at night to use their light to attract mates. Since it is dark at night, the fireflies can see each other's lights. It's almost as if the lights are love letters sent to attract other fireflies. Fireflies are not the only living things to make light through bioluminescence. Certain kinds of mushrooms, jellyfish, plankton, and bacteria can also make their own light. The existence of such an amazing process like bioluminescence in numerous species of living organisms points to a common, intelligent Designer.

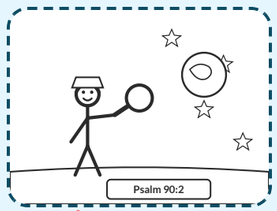
Evidence Detective ASK DIGGER DOUG · WHO IS GOD?

Who Made God?



Color me!

Dear Sallie,

I know this might sound a little strange, but God wasn't created. He always has been. The Bible teaches that God is eternal. The scripture speaks of "the eternal God" (Deuteronomy 33:27) who's "years will have no end" (Psalm 102:27). He is "from everlasting to everlasting" (Psalm 90:2). In other words, He had no beginning and he will have no ending. God is not dependent upon anything or anyone outside Himself for his own existence. I know it is difficult to understand God's eternal nature, because everything that we see around us has a beginning and ending. God, however, has neither. Isn't it great to know that God exists and that we always can count on Him to be there for us?

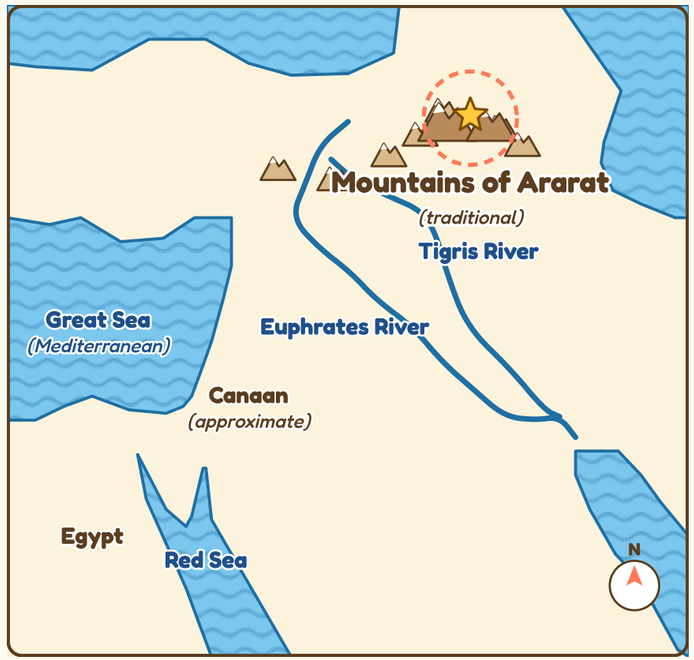
Where in the Bible World?

FIND IT ON THE MAP!



"Then the ark rested in the seventh month, the seventeenth day of the month, on the mountains of Ararat." Genesis 8:4

1. Put your finger on the big ★. That is where the Bible says the ark rested: the mountains of Ararat.
2. Now find the Great Sea, the Red Sea, and the Euphrates River. Trace the river with blue.

The Bible says "the mountains of Ararat" (a mountain region), not one peak. The star marks the traditional site, Mount Ararat (Ağrı Dağı) in eastern Türkiye; the exact resting place is not known. Simple drawing — not to scale.
